By point mutation of the sucC gene, the enzyme expression activity is reduced to balance the metabolic flow problem between the TCA cycle for cell growth and product accumulation, and thus increase the valine yield. The fermentation results showed that the method was able to significantly increase the yield of valine from the original 1.3 g/L to 1.61 g/L, which increased the yield by 23.8% and provided a strong strain support for further industrialisation.
